hat. He wore these clothes in the honour of his last lesson. He had great love towards the country and their mother tongue. He loved French language and was feeling guilty for not being able to teach French to Franz. On the last day, he taught everything he knew and wrote 'Live La France' on board which means 'Long live France'. He loved gardening and fishing too.

12. (i) When the narrator started to drown the third time, he felt that his legs were paralyzed and could not move his legs. The yellowish light of water started to fade and he felt peace. He was on the verge of death but he felt no fear instead it was dark and peaceful. After some time, he was saved and found himself lying on the side of pool.

Perhaps the _____ will go.

Reference - This stanza is taken from the poem 'Keeping Quiet', composed by a well known author Pablo Neruda.

Context - In this stanza, author tells us to learn from the Earth itself as when everything seems dead, the nature becomes alive again. Poet wants us to keep quiet as he leaves.

Explanation - In this stanza, the poet tells us to learn from Earth. He says that perhaps it can teach us about the never-ending cycle of life and nature. Poet means that when everything seems quiet and dead-like in winters as the trees are bare (no leaves), no flowers bloom, so many insects and animals are not seen, so everything seems like a dead body. But after sometime, the season changes to spring season, the nature seems to be alive again as it is not silent now. There are flowers, trees, animals and beautiful insects everywhere. In the same manner, humans should learn too that even if one is going through a hard phase in life, he should not give up as it will pass soon. Then, poet says that he would count up to twelve as twelve represents numbers of hours in clock. We should stay quiet and the poet would leave.

to die some day. The author feels the same for her mother as she is old now. Her face is pale which resembles a corpse and the late night winter moon. The fears of losing some precious person of life and the childhood fear of not meeting one's mother ever again in lifetime is also described in this poem.

15.(i) There are a lot of things of beauty which are mentioned in the poem. The things of beauty are the nature, the trees, the flowers, the fountains, the rivers, the tales of strong warriors, the forests and the animals living in them. The fresh air and the relaxing voice of insects are the thing of beauty and their beauty never fades.

(ii) Aunt Jennifer's fingers were fluttering through the thread and needle as she was doing embroidery. Her fingers were fluttering because she was not mentally stable. She was afraid of uncle. He was abusive and dominant. He made Aunt Jennifer's condition like the way it is. She is always in fear from him. He told her not to do embroidery and she was doing it in his absence, so her fingers were fluttering.

16. 'The Third Level'

The narrator 'Charley' used to imagine the third level because he wanted to escape this world which was full of worries, pain and war. He wanted to live a peaceful life as his grandfather did back in 1890s in Gatesberg. There was no war at that time, at that time, there was a train/metro station which could lead anywhere. So, the author imagined the third level as he wanted to live a peaceful life like did his grandfather.
